Andean Pact: "Progressive" Peruvian Fascists Embrace Chilean "Reactionaries"

Sept. 12 (IPS) — The "revolutionary" nationalist Peruvian junta, headed by General Velasco, has just sent delegates to Santiago to join with the "reactionary" nationalist Chilean junta in the celebration of Chile's Independence Day. The festival saluting Chile's independence from Spain coincides with the anniversary of the overthrow of the Allende government a year ago.

By overcoming their supposed moral objections to the Chilean junta's murder of thousands of leftists and workers in the interests of maintaining the traditional joint celebration, the Peruvian government has exposed its "left" stance towards the Chilean generals as the flimsiest demagoguery. To drive this home, the announcement of the delegation's trip to Chile came simultaneously with a ban on all demonstrations against the Chilean butchers in Lima, Peru's capital. The demonstrations, which were to be part of worldwide protests commemorating the fall of Allende Sept. 11, 1973, were decreed illegal and punishable by military court.

The Peruvian generals' "revolutionary" criticism of their Chilean counterparts is merely that while they killed the right people, Chileans have failed to adopt the "progressive" cover which is now de rigueur for modern CIA regimes. The Peruvian government fears that militant demonstrations chanting "Down with the Junta" might be interpreted too easily by the starving and restless Peruvian working class as the signal for action against the local generals.

The Cubans, who in 1968 denounced the Peruvian junta as "gorillas," have been snuggling in Velasco's arms ever since. This criminal cowardice paves the way for the devouring of the Latin American working class.

Rockefeller's "Final Solution" Takes Hold

The following by Enrique Valla of the Spanish Press Agency [EFE], is reprinted from the editorial page of Diario Las Americas, Sept. 12, 1974.

THE HUMAN BODY AS RAW MATERIAL

From the mummified human body petroleum can be quickly extracted, Dr. Oscar Urtreaga Ballon has explained in Peru. Dr. Urtreaga is director of the Museum of Paleontology of the "Second of May" hospital of the Peruvian capital. This is how man would become a rich raw material of bituminous substances and cemeteries will end up converted into refineries.

If the shortage of petroleum becomes exacerbated and its price continues to rise, due to the exhaustion of existing deposits of the familiar black gold within 30 years or so, according to predictions, the human body and possibly that of animals would become an article of prime necessity. Instead of a gloomy morgue, our destiny would be the refinery.

"I heard your husband passed away, Juanita."

"Yes, dear, they're already refining the poor guy...."

Through the artificial mummification of a human body, which can be done in 10 days, one can obtain petroleum under the influence of temperature and high pressure, which reduces the size of the anatomic structures without it being possible for any part of the body to be attacked by the micro-organisms that produce putrefaction.

All of this has been demonstrated by work carried out in a laboratory. As a result of the indicated temperature and pressure, animal and vegetable organic matter can be transformed into a bituminous substance, similar to natural petroleum, that is, a blackish oil.

In the laboratory various cases have been observed of anatomical pieces in a state of experimental mummification. The skin of those pieces became blackish until it became a bituminous substance.

From that petroleum extracted from the human body, through fractional distillation, says Dr. Urteaga Ballon, they have also achieved gaseous, liquid and solid derivatives that normally are taken from natural petroleum, that is, gasoline, kerosene, Diesel, paraffin, and lubricants. Almost nothing differentiates these from those that are already known on the market.

"They say that petroleum from whites turns out to be less dense."

"Lubricants from Chinese are more economical; it already comes with a yellow color."

These derivatives extracted from the human body have already been tested in combustion engines with excellent results. It has also been possible to observe — Dr. Urteaga Ballon adds — that said derivatives have the same efficiency ("capacity for action") as their homonyms from conventional petroleum. In the future the petroleum from mummies will be a highly accredited brand, so it seems.

In the museum of the "Second of May" hospital in Lima they are exhibiting the first experimental mummy whose characteristics are similar to the pre-Colombians found in Peru. Many visitors thought that the experimental mummy was extremely ancient.

We're so bad off for resources in the world that we now have to start to supply ourselves with our very selves. Our fathers and mothers, grandmothers and grandfathers, will serve to move airplanes, buses, automobiles and trains. The oriental theory of the transmigration of souls, metempsychosis, will be replaced by the transmutation of matter.

Lavoisier can be content: his theory will be fully confirmed. In effect, matter is neither created nor destroyed, it is transformed into gasoline.

"How well my car's running with this gasoline!"

"Of course, it's from the mummy of Paavo Nurmi...."
