

X. STOP ROCKEFELLER'S ORGANIZED CRIME

Why haven't "our" law enforcement agencies put a stop to these criminal activities? We quote Nelson Gross. As "Senior Adviser and Coordinator for International Narcotics Matters, Department of State," Mr. Gross told the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1972 that "responsibility for narcotics intelligence coordination" resides in the...CIA. "The Central Intelligence Agency," Mr. Gross expanded, "provides invaluable assistance in its collection and analysis of drug-related intelligence."

The House of Representatives' Committee on Foreign Affairs is also charged with overseeing narcotics investigation. We read in a report of the Staff Survey Team appointed by the Committee: "In the past year there have been several public allegations to the effect that the Central Intelligence Agency has been involved, directly or indirectly, in narcotics traffic in Southeast Asia.... The Staff Survey Team found no evidence to support these allegations." Inquiring further we discover that the figure responsible for the functioning of the Staff Research Team is Congressman Robert Steele, a former employee of...the CIA.

And the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics? It must have been feared that even this bumbling federal agency might stumble into the CIA's "Pepsi Cola bottling plant" in Vientiane, Laos. For when the Bureau mooted sending a team of agents to Laos to investigate the source of heroin that was drugging G.I.'s in South Vietnam, the investigation was quashed both by Rockefeller minion Henry Kissinger and...the CIA.

What about the Narcotics Division of the New York Police Department, charged with investigations in the narcotics capital of the United States? Newsday writes that as a result of demoralizing "...corruption charges by the State Investigation Commission and the Knapp Commission...most of the men, including a large number of honest ones, were transferred out of the division." Newsday omits, however, that the entire membership of the State Investigation Commission was appointed by Governor Nelson Rockefeller and that the Knapp Commission was similarly composed of various individuals whose political and financial ties are to Nelson Rockefeller.
