

also known as an ally of Andreotti. Writing in the Rome paper Paese Sera, which has unofficial ties to both the Socialist and Communist parties, Granelli attacked those who were attempting to sabotage the growing programmatic alliance between the Communists and the prime minister.

Referring to the first postwar government made possible by collaboration between the PCI-led working class resistance and the Christian Democratic industrialists who had joined them in fighting the fascists, Granelli stated: "If the current crisis cannot be resolved by the forces that came out of the Resistance and formed the Republic and democracy, then we cannot talk about our chances for having any future whatsoever."

IPS Terror Control Exposed In Italy

The following are translated excerpts from an article, "Why There is Terror in Italy — The Blind Terror of IPS," published in the May 5 issue of the widely-read weekly Giorni—Vie Nuove, the magazine of the Italian Communist party-linked cooperatives. The article independently corroborates the evidence published beginning over a year ago by this news service, identifying the Washington-based Institute for Policy Studies and its "leftist" director Marcus Raskin as the main Rockefeller-financed control center for international terrorism, in collaboration with Rockefeller's Interpol — for both "right-wing" and "left-wing" varieties.

Italy has been subjected to an escalating wave of such terror operations, including in recent weeks the kidnapping and attempted poisoning of two nationally prominent Socialist Party leaders and the murders of several magistrates involved in investigating the terror. Until this time, however, no Italian press outside of direct NSIPS affiliates had identified the real international sources of the terror, and exposés had been limited at best to pointing a finger at the right-wing terror networks operated through Bavarian neo-Nazi Franz Josef Strauss, without indicating the Rockefeller IPS-Interpol hand behind these networks. In the first article of the current five-part series (see EIR No. 18), Giorni Vie Nuove revealed that there are two, increasingly warring CIAs — a traditionalist one, and a second "left" outfit which trained Italian students through Johns Hopkins University and the National Student Association, and sent them to Italy for terror and destabilization operations against the Communist Party. This week's part two pinpoints Raskin's chief collaborators and modus operandi, published for the first time anywhere, including how drugs are used by the Raskin networks to create terrorists.

It is clear from the way the exposé is written that it is based on information made available by Prime Minister Andreotti's allies within the government itself, as part of an urgent effort to free Italy from Interpol control. The information is "leaked" from a report by the office of Emilio Santillo, a close Andreotti ally who heads the national Anti-Terrorism Unit. The report has been submitted to the office of Italian Interior Minister Francesco Cossiga. Cossiga, Italy's top Interpol agent, has been linked in the press already to at least the coverup, if not the deployment, of terrorism.

For the non-Italian reader, a few further identifications are in order. General Vito Miceli was formerly a high-ranking officer of Italian Defense Intelligence (SID) against whom Andreotti instigated an investigation which led to his indictment for involvement in fascist terrorism. "Affari Riservati" (Secret Affairs) was a special investigative unit directly created by the CIA inside the Interior Ministry, which was officially dissolved recently for "dirty tricks" scandals but reportedly still functions under another guise. The Red Brigades and NAP are the most notorious terror gangs in Italy; Langley of course refers to Langley, Va. — the headquarters of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

Why There Is Terrorism In Italy — The Blind Terror Of IPS

On (Interior Minister —ed.) Cossiga's desk there is a document on terrorism written by Russomano, the secretary of Santillo. There is no longer any doubt that Russomano's files contain names and indications which prove that behind terrorism there lies the CIA. But it is not sufficient to just name the CIA. Names have to be mentioned, and we are naming the names.

The man who for over ten years has been directing terrorism in Italy and Western Europe is Marcus Raskin of the Institute for Policy Studies, a private institution financed by Rockefeller, which for more than ten years has financed right and left-wing subversive groups operating in Western Europe. This organization, although not directly linked to the CIA, has received orders from the big brains at Langley to destabilize unwelcome governments, and the Honorable Andreotti is not welcome to the American fascists who have in Rockefeller and Kissinger their undisputed spokesmen.

Marcus Raskin is the man who created the Red Brigades, the NAP and all the other subversive groups. In practical terms this man in his 40s, who comes from the New York underworld, is accused of being the controller behind the blind terrorism of General Yarborough, ex-chief of underground operations of the CIA. IPS is linked to the principal American universities and interconnects with the secret services. It is divided into three sectors:

- (1) official security services
- (2) extremist groups
- (3) destabilization operations

The Italian Network

Marcus Raskin has a three-tier operation. The first is recruitment, the second is operations, and the third is the assassinations department which includes trained killers to assassinate inconvenient people. The first tier is controlled by Eddy Grevillz, who is very well known to Interpol. He is active and confident, comes from Lyons, and is a direct creation of Marcus Raskin. It appears that he lives in a locale in the area of Como in which Rockefeller has "cultural" interests. Investigators have established that he is the father of the Red Brigades.

How the Red Brigades Were Born

Between 1968 and 1969 Grevillz was in Trento where he became involved with the problems of sociology students. This was the University where Curcio and the other Red Brigades came into being. Grevillz also controls the drug traffic among youth. In fact, drug addicts are potential terrorists. Grevillz' men infiltrated themselves into the autonomist drug addicts and made drugs available to them. Later, they suddenly withdrew the drugs and blackmailed the youth, after which began the brainwashing which produces terrorists.

The agents of the criminal "case officers" (which means controllers in their jargon) obtain their (the recruits') loyalty by promising them drugs. This is why contact exists between the CIA and the criminal world. The ties between the CIA and Cosa Nostra are known. The CIA has also made a pact with the Calabrian drangheta (local criminal organization in the South-ed.) which in turn contracted to carry out kidnappings.

The complicity of the police is clear. Until some time ago, Grevillz had contact with the "Affari Reservati" and with General Miceli. Today it seems that Grevillz has close relations with the Viminale (Interior Ministry). The secret services have singled out all the responsible individuals but they are all untouchable people.

Erik Fulbright is the second man of the network, charged with using the terrorists politically. The orders come from Langley. The general headquarters are in the Rome office of a large multinational company (whose name we know).

Finally, the assassinations department is directed by Rene Polanski, a Pole who has been known to the police for some time. He gets his orders and carries them out without question.

This is the organization which directs terrorism.

The French Military Goes Psychotic

FRANCE

The following strategic assessment was issued April 28 by U.S. Labor Party Chairman Lyndon H. LaRouche.

The French military command, which has not led a successful war since Napoléon's retreat from Moscow, has, true to that tradition, volunteered France for a Rockefeller enterprise which competent NATO countries' military professionals — e.g., in the U.S. and West Germany — correctly regard as suicidal incompetence. President Giscard d'Estaing's African adventure, and the babbling attributed to certain French quarters in yesterday's Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung suggest that Michel Foucault might be heading up Giscard's military advisers.

Admittedly, apart from the Vichy tradition traceable to General Boulanger, France has also produced its Foch and de Gaulle. Unfortunately, on the record, the bunglers predominate until the point they have lost or almost lost a war.

We do not exaggerate France's dismal military record. The Prussian defeat of the Second Empire should have surprised no one. Louis Napoléon's earlier military successes were stage-managed set-ups, arranged for him by the House of Rothschild — who manipulated the finances, and hence the deployment of little Louis' adversary. But for prima donnas' interference into the German military command, Germany would have won the First World War almost as quickly as it defeated France in 1940. In both world wars, the most significant German advantage was the imbecility of the French command. The same French officer corps which lost the 1940 Battle of France degenerated still further in the process of conducting — and losing — the Indo-China War. Algeria was not a war, but a bloated military occupation exercise, in which the overall quality of the French officer corps was degraded still further.

De Gaulle was the exemplary exception to this, the rallying-point for those officers who had actual or potential qualities of strategic perception. Unfortunately, competent military leaders are no longer in the saddle; the Giscard government, by weeding out

Debré Blasts Atlanticist War Aims

In a short statement on French national television May 4, Gaullist leader Michel Debré explicitly denounced NATO's war aims against the Soviet Union. Justifying his — and most Gaullists' — refusal of European political integration, Debré said: "We do not want a war with the Soviet Union decided by others. They will ask us to put our nuclear weapons on the Czechoslovakian border and thus to participate in their war. If we refuse, they will cut off all credit and blackmail us." Debré had not alluded to Atlanticist war plans since the 1973-74 "Oil Hoax."

actual and potential Gaullists from the key military positions, has put the bunglers back to command. The same French military faction which Prussia defeated in 1870, nearly routed in 1914, and crushed in 1940 — the Vichy tradition — is back in command and disposed to parody its worst bunglings and atrocities of the past.

Vichy is the tradition of Louis Napoléon. Then and now,
