Representing the controllers of race riots in this country were Minister Louis Farrakhan; Dr. Barbara Sizemore from the University of Pittsburgh; prison reform activist Mel King, a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives; Curtis Woods, president of the Bed/Stye Restoration Corporation; Dr. Alvin Poussaint from the Tavistock Institute and Harvard University; Dr. James Breedon, superintendant of the Boston public schools; and Dr. Robert Browne, president of the Twenty-First Century Foundation.

Spokesmen for slave labor/sweat equity were Joseph Brooks, president of the Emergency Land Fund; Dennis Blacket, president of Housing Innovations, Boston; Harriet R. Michel, director of the Office of Youth Employment Programs in the U.S. Department of Labor; and Rep. John Conyers from Michigan.

The conference literature notes: "The present world order is arranged in a way that allows six percent of the population to control more than two-thirds of the wealth.... The 'have's' of the Western world have achieved a level of material comfort that is unprecedented in the annals of human history. The 'have-nots' of Asia, Africa and the Americas are beset by poverty, malnutrition, disease, and the concomitant characteristics of social instability."

What they propose are "new forms of economic and political organization that are structurally and philosophically cooperative," incorporating "principles of democracy."

Translating words into action

How are these "principles of democracy" being translated at the street level? This part of the operation is being run through the same Kennedy-Justice Department networks established by Attorney General Ramsey Clark in the 1960s. In the past few months, many of the old racial hot spots have been reignited with telltale tracks from the Justice Department's Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) showing all over. Through the LEAA's Office of Community Anti-Crime Prevention (CACP), tens of millions of dollars have been poured into the cashboxes of veteran race riot provocateurs over the past three years. Under the cover of "community involvement" in police work, LEAA-CACP has set up 165 programs around the country which primarily involve the creation of vigilante squads.

In Philadelphia, LEAA-CACP gave $250,000 for "Community Security Patrols" to Felekah Fatan's House of Umoja, a spinoff from Newark race-rioter Imamu Baraka's network. The House of Umoja's "Security

What is the NBUF

The National Black United Fund, based in Los Angeles, was created in 1974 by the same Indiana-based Episcopalian networks that created Jim Jones: J. Irwin Miller, his Cummins Engine Company, and the related Cummins Engine Foundation, Sweeny Miller Foundation, and also that offspring of methadone, the Eli Lilly Foundation. Walter Bremond, the current executive director of NBUF, formerly worked for Cummins Engine. Bremond set up, with Cummins Engine Foundation money, the Brother Crusade, the direct predecessor organization to NBUF.

The primary contributors to NBUF are the Cummins Engine and Eli Lilly foundations. The president of NBUF is Dr. Carlton B. Goodlett of San Francisco. Goodlett was the "personal physician" to Jim Jones and had traveled to the People's Temple in Guyana only a few weeks prior to the mass murder.

A look at the financial controllers of the National Black United Fund gives the entire story away. A top Midwest Episcopalian, J. Irwin Miller, is also a member of the New York Council on Foreign Relations, whose most recent published scenario the "controlled disintegration" of the U.S. economy and government. He is on the board of directors of the Ford Foundation, Chemical Bank, Yale University, Butler University, and American Telephone and Telegraph.

Through the Cummins Engine Foundation and the Irwin Sweeney Miller Foundation, Miller has provided hundreds of thousands of dollars to projects of the Institute for Policy Studies such as CounterSpy (through Youth, Inc.) and the Fund for Investigative Journalism, to the gun-running American Indian Movement, and to the Congress of African Peoples, run by Newark race rioter Imamu Baraka.

The Jones connection continues: The British Fabian Society's Oxford cult, the Disciples of Christ, and its action agency, the Fellowship of Reconciliation, ran the "dissident church" networks in Indianapolis in conjunction with the American Friends Service Committee. A key operation was Butler University where Jim Jones was trained. Butler was controlled by the Disciples of Christ and received heavy funding from Miller's foundations and from Lilly. Miller, as stated before, sits on the board of trustees of Butler University.
