

Rabin murder is part of London's global terror spree

by Jeffrey Steinberg

The Nov. 4 assassination of Israel's Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin will likely go down in history as the most heinous political crime since the murder of President John F. Kennedy, one-third of a century ago. And, like the Kennedy assassination, the cold-blooded murder of Rabin was a calculated geostrategic move, planned and executed from London.

Not since the epoch of the Kennedy assassination and the multiple failed attempts to kill France's Gen. Charles de Gaulle, has the British Crown been driven to such desperate measures. Since the Clinton inauguration, the House of Windsor and the Club of the Isles have been implicated in more than a score of assassination tries against the U.S. President, bolstered by a propaganda assault against Clinton led by the Crown's Hollinger Corp. media empire. Hollinger's Jerusalem Post has been in the forefront of propaganda efforts to derail the Middle East peace process, and to create the climate for the kind of violence that struck down Rabin.

And since Jacques Chirac was elected to the Presidency of France, the same Windsor/Club of the Isles crowd has been engaged in an all-out effort to throw France into chaos, using irregular warfare.

Spotlight on London

In fact, the assassination of the Israeli head of government, who had the courage to break from his own past outlook and become a leading proponent of Middle East peace and Israeli-Palestinian reconciliation, came at the moment that leading French government officials and news outlets were shining a spotlight on London, for its complicity in the wave of nominally Islamist terrorism that has hit all across France since July of this year.

Following raids on several safehouses and arms caches of the Algerian Armed Islamic Group (GIA), French police unearthed computer records and accounting books showing that the bombing and assassination spree has been directed by a network of known Algerian killers who have operated from London with the de facto blessing and protection of the highest-level British authorities. Faced with public exposure of its role in nurturing the biggest irregular warfare destabilization of France since the Secret Army Organization (OAS) stalked President de Gaulle, and faced with the upcoming State visit by France's President Jacques Chirac on Oct. 29-30, British authorities moved to deflect some of the pressure by arresting one of the GIA controllers (see article by Christine Bierre, p. 55).

British Prime Minister John Major then turned around and protested the French crackdown on the GIA and the pressure on London, claiming that it forced the British secret services to "prematurely" round up some of the London-based components of the global "afghansi" terror international, a terrorist network sponsored by British intelligence since the late 1970s, with the complicity of the George Bush-Oliver North "Iran-Contra" networks in the United States (see EIR Special Report, "New Terror International Targets South Asia," Oct. 13).

But even as the French were taking off the gloves concerning London's sponsorship of terrorism, fast-paced events in the Middle East were simultaneously driving the British Crown and its secret intelligence services to resort to "executive action" in Tel Aviv in an attempt to shut down the Middle East peace process. As Scott Thompson details below (see p. 57), London did not have to covertly dispatch Special Air Services (SAS) teams to Israel, as they did in the 1994 Rwanda genocide, or in the even more recent effort to disrupt France's nuclear weapons tests in the South Pacific through the activation of Prince Philip's eco-terrorists. For the past 130 years, London's Quatuor Coronati Lodge, a secret irregular warfare unit run directly out of the British royal household, has been fostering the growth of “assassin cults” among Jews and Muslims alike, to ensure that any effort aimed at establishing a stable set of relations among sovereign nation-states in the region is quickly drenched in blood.

The murder of Rabin was the work of one such Jewish assassins cult. Today, the fate of the Middle East peace process rests on the question of whether Israeli leaders, beginning with Prime Minister Shimon Peres, will break the silence on London’s role in the killing, and go after the so-called “Jewish underground” and its allied Islamist counterparts in Islamic Jihad, Hezbollah, and Hamas, from the top down.

The Israeli police minister has ruled out the idea that the Rabin assassination was the work of a “lone assassin.” Six individuals, all associated with splinter groups of the late Rabbi Meir Kahane’s Jewish Defense League/Kach Party, in addition to Rabin’s assassin, Yigal Amir, have been arrested and charged with participation in the stalking and assassination of Rabin. If Israeli authorities carry out a massive crackdown on the West Bank settlements where Jewish assassination squads have been trained and assembled, but go no further, whatever benefits are derived from the crackdown will be short-lived. New Kahane Chai or Eyal killers are waiting in the wings, under the banner of the same London-manufactured “Greater Israel” and “Temple Mount” ideologies that warped the minds of Amir and the others.

Deadline for murder

Prime Minister Rabin was placed in the cross-hairs following the Sept. 28, 1995 signing of the Oslo II accords at the White House, and the defeat of an Israeli Knesset (parliament) vote of no-confidence in the Rabin government’s peace perspective several weeks later. Momentum was building for the peace process. Israeli Defense Force units were already pulling out of parts of the West Bank, and the prospects of a political destabilization of the Rabin-Peres team had gone up in smoke when the Knesset gave its vote of support.

London could not allow the Middle East peace process to go forward, for a variety of global-strategic reasons. For one thing, the peace process was a singularity in the war between London and Washington. The Clinton administration was in the center of the peace process, and was already working toward a breakthrough in the Israeli-Syrian peace negotiations. The Clinton-Yeltsin summit in Hyde Park, New York, vastly improved the prospects of peace in every troubled region of the globe, and U.S. sources have indicated that even Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, anxious to curry support from Washington, was offering to use his not insignificant influence with Syrian President Hafez al-Assad to get him to break with the “Greater Syria” faction inside his own ruling circles, and pursue peace.

London was facing another checkmate in Asia, where the Clinton summit with China’s President Jiang Zemin just 24 hours after the precedent-setting partnership talks of Presidents Clinton and Yeltsin, opened the door for closer, if not intimate, Washington-Beijing cooperation—against persistent British efforts to break up China and thereby unleash an Asia-wide destabilization. Furthermore, the Clinton administration is continuing to coordinate its foreign policy offensive closely with the German government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl, who, since July 1994, has been Clinton’s new “special partner.” Kohl will be in Beijing in mid-November, just days before President Clinton will be in Osaka, Japan for the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) forum meeting. There, Clinton will again meet with Jiang Zemin and other Asian leaders, and then go to Tokyo for several days of bilateral talks. Clinton will then go on to London, Dublin, and Belfast, in an effort to further the U.S. intervention to bring peace to Northern Ireland, an initiative that has particularly infuriated the British Crown.

Another assassination in Colombia

In Ibero-America as well, the United States was charting new territory on the anti-drug front—to the chagrin of the Windsors and their Club of the Isles allies. In effect, the Clinton administration has signed on to key components of Lyndon LaRouche's March 1985 fifteen-point plan for a hemisphere-wide war against the multinational narcotics cartel, in particular the need to crack down on London's offshore money-laundering safe-havens. In addition to his United Nations speech and the publicly issued Executive Order declaring a state of emergency against the global narcotics syndicate, President Clinton on Oct. 21 signed Presidential Decision Directive 42, spelling out an ambitious assault against 50 nations which give safe haven to illegal money-laundering centers. The implication is that a new American offensive against the British Crown's irregular warfare infrastructure is under way.

To throw a new monkey wrench into the Colombia situation, a prominent Colombian statesman and one-time Conservative Party Presidential candidate, Alvaro Gómez Hurtado, was assassinated on Nov. 2 in the streets of Bogotá as he was leaving a university building (see p. 59). The Gómez murder came less than a week before the Rabin assassination.

In the early hours of Nov. 5, a so-called lone crazy broke into the residence of Canada's Prime Minister Jean Chrétien, and stalked about the house undetected for nearly an hour. As EIR reported last week, the Oct. 30 Quebec separatist referendum was but the prelude to a protracted period of instability and possible irregular warfare and secessionism all across Canada. Combined with the continuing Zapatista insurrection in Mexico, this spells a potential two-front destabilization directed against the United States.

No sane person can doubt that the world is being hit with the greatest wave of irregular warfare in more than 30 years. The assault is coordinated.

With this issue, EIR completes the publication of the initial series of three Special Reports on the "new international terrorism" (see EIR, Oct. 13 and Nov. 10). In his introduction, written a month before the Rabin assassination, Lyndon LaRouche warned of the onset of an era of London-directed irregular warfare, and cited ethnic, religious, and environmental conflicts as the preferred mechanisms to be unleashed by Britain. Recent events bear out the accuracy of LaRouche's warnings.
