

Macedonian Patriots Play 'LaRouche Card'

by Umberto Pascali

Twenty-four hours after its first issue hit the streets of Macedonia, Manifest magazine had already become a phenomenon. People were contacting the editor, Krum Velkov, to thank him for "clearing the air." It became the focus on prime-time TV programs and in discussions popping up all over the country, in the final rush toward the general elections on Sept. 15. The front cover, featuring Lyndon LaRouche (with the title: "They Want To Involve Us in a New World War") and LaRouche's punchy interview (see below), provoked a much-needed, positive shock in a country that has been under increasing physical and psychological assault since the terrorist attacks on Macedonia, from bases in NATO-controlled Kosovo, during the Spring.

It is remarkable that in this situation, a relatively small country has succeeded in putting up such resistance to its Anglo-American fifth column. This happens in the midst of renewed war dangers surrounding the country, the result of Anglo-American maneuvers aimed at preventing any stabilization and development of the Balkans. But Macedonia did not give up—rather the opposite. Prime Minister Ljubco Georgievski has made a series of statements denouncing the ongoing attack against Macedonia's national sovereignty. At the end of June, in a speech where he denounced the "corruption" of mega-speculator George Soros and his methods of buying up intellectuals to turn them against their own country, the Prime Minister went so far as to pronounce the "forbidden" words, "Lyndon LaRouche."

On Aug. 2 at the celebration of the national holiday, whereas the protégé of the "international community," President Boris Trajkovski, flew to the United States for a conference on the illusory "New Economy," Georgievski stated: "It is a fact that certain structures of the international community not only failed to fight terrorism as a global evil, but granted unprincipled assistance to the terrorists." Speaking before more than 100,000 people, Georgievski continued: "Many words have been said about multi-ethnicity in Kosovo, Macedonia, Bosnia, but in reality, what has been happening is the biggest ethnic cleansing that this part of the Balkans can remember. Some international structures are supporting ethnic cleansing in Bosnia, Macedonia, Serbia."

In response to this challenge, the Anglo-American "fifth column"—including Transparency International, the Soros gang, the International Crisis Group (ICG), and the Forum

Group (which supplies cadres to many of those non-governmental organizations)—went berserk. Ljubmir Frckoski, the most prominent of these agents, and a former Interior and Foreign Minister and currently adviser to President Trajkovski, from the pages of the daily Dnevnik blasted Georgievski and his ally, the Interior Minister Ljube Boskovski, with what he took to be his most devastating insult: "Their favorite literature is LaRouche." Working himself up into a paroxysm of rage, Frckoski concluded his attack on Georgievski/Boskovski with these incredible words: "Anyway, we shall finish them off, before they cause damage to the society."

British Royal Consort Prince Philip's Transparency International issued noisy ululations on alleged corruption in high places. The International Crisis Group presented a report on "Macedonia's Public Secret: How Corruption Drags the Country Down," entirely taken from old media reports. The report was immediately taken up and serialized by the Soros-influenced media. It is difficult to imagine more blatant interference into a nation's internal affairs, a few days before the elections.

Minister Boskovski reacted forcefully, speaking to a rally in Kumanovo: "Such groups should be expelled from the Republic of Macedonia. [Their aim] is to undermine democracy and to create a climate of insecurity." The local head of the ICG, U.S. citizen Edward Joseph, "is a well-known political hack, smuggler, and criminal who speaks against the government of Macedonia without any data and directly interferes in our internal affairs." Other sources revealed that Macedonian diplomatic and intelligence channels would ask the U.S. and Australian governments for an explanation.

An Instrument in the Battle for Truth

It was in this atmosphere, that Manifest hit the newsstands. An overview of its main articles will illustrate its impact: The cover page, besides LaRouche, carries a small picture of Frckoski, apparently picking his nose. In a dramatic autobiographical article, editor Krum Velkov details his previous confrontation with Frckoski. When Velkov wrote articles critical of Frckoski, he was told that organized-crime figures had been recruited to "break his legs." Later on, in a televised interview, a known mafioso, Roly Jakupovich, confessed that Frckoski had asked him to teach a journalist a lesson: "to break his legs."

The real point is that Manifest succeeded in putting together a lucid, strategic, LaRouchean approach, with profound cultural and historical elaborations aimed at answering the key question: How to create a new Renaissance? Its declared purpose is to create a mass movement, especially among students. This "militant Renaissance" approach is coupled with in-depth intelligence studies concerning the deployment of the so-called international community against Macedonia, which the magazine labels as "The Soft Coup d'État."

"Read It and Think!" reads the poster issued to advertise

the magazine. Teams of students volunteered to put it up. The students' enthusiasm was not cooled, even when two of their cars were involved in a bizarre accident, in which a truck hit them at a red light. "LaRouche's ideas are comparable to red-hot metal penetrating the conscience of the world, when he unmask[s] the oligarchical dark forces' methods and policies," Velkov explains. The lead editorial states the raison d'être for Manifest, in the context of the historical confrontation between republican and oligarchical principles. "Manifest will be an instrument in the battle for the truth. For Macedonia . . . for humanity." It further stresses the importance of organizing youth into a patriotic force that understands the real battle going on in the world right now.

The inaugural issue includes:

- A regular column ("The Open Conspiracy") on LaRouche's speech in Rome on July 2, on the Middle East war danger;

- Coverage of a study by Helga Zepp-LaRouche on Friedrich Schiller: "Why Are We Still Barbarians?"

- A feature on "How the IMF Executed Argentina," accompanied by the text of a parliamentary solution by former Italian Prime Minister, Sen. Giulio Andreotti and other Italian Senators, calling for a New Bretton Woods financial reorganization; the feature concludes with an appeal to Macedonia and other countries to act now;

- A dossier, "Macedonia Must Defend Itself Against the Soft Coup d'État," which describes the penetration of the "international community's fifth column," targetting Frckoski, whom it compares to Petronius Arbitr, Nero's Magister Elegantiarum who, when the Emperor changed his mind, was forced to commit suicide;

- Short profiles of the main destabilizing tools deployed inside Macedonia: Transparency International, Soros' Open Society Institute Macedonia, the International Crisis Group, the Institute for War and Peace Reporting (IWPR), Transfuse, et al.

- An exclusive investigative report on the origin of the "non-governmental organization" (NGO) concept, as an instrument invented by British colonialism, plus a devastating profile of Frckoski ("The Fascist Who Wanted To Be a Democrat");

- A "Strategic Insight" column by Macedonia government strategic adviser Emilija Geleva, titled "Development Versus Destabilization," which stresses the need for large-scale infrastructural development—the Eurasian Land-Bridge—and a New Bretton Woods;

- A first-hand report from the positions of the Macedonian Army, with exclusive photographs;

- An article on the "anti-globalization" movement as an instrument of the globalizers themselves, with profiles of Teddy Goldsmith and Toni Negri. With a youthful audience in mind, the author writes: "The real fight against globalization can only be based on the fundamentals of human civilization in its positive form: national identity, sovereignty, development. . . ."

- A scientific column, "Back to the Moon, Then on to Mars," by Wendel V. Mendel.

Interestingly, the Executive Director of Soros' Open Society Institute, Vladimir Milchin, couldn't wait more than 24 hours before publishing a slanderous attack against Manifest in Utrinski Vensik, which ended up attacking this writer as a "conspirophile." Milchin presents himself and the other components of the "fifth column" as victims of a government "witch-hunt." In the Macedonian capital of Skopje, the rantings of Soros' man were immediately dismissed as "the bleating of the wolves."

LaRouche Featured in New Macedonian Magazine

The main feature in the inaugural issue of the new Macedonian magazine Manifest is an exclusive interview with Lyndon LaRouche. Manifest, which hit the newsstands on Aug. 15, also elaborates the leading issues associated with LaRouche, from the need for New Bretton Woods monetary system and the Eurasian Land-Bridge to his intervention in the Middle East. LaRouche gave the interview from Wiesbaden, Germany on July 25, to Umberto Pascali. Here are excerpts.

Q: In the last few days, we've seen a very sharp collapse in the Wall Street stock market, which confirms what you have been saying for many years. So, this is not a disaster, but indeed it is an opportunity. Can you explain for our readers what is really happening now and, above all, what should happen?

LaRouche: What is happening now is a general breakdown of a system, which has developed internationally over a period of about 35 or more years. This was a change in the United States in particular, and also the United Kingdom, from a production-oriented society to an imperial consumer society—that is, relying more and more on getting, at reduced prices, material from overseas, from cheap labor, rather than producing it ourselves. In this process, what has happened is that we have built up a gigantic financial bubble internationally. This bubble is now disintegrating.

Nothing could be done to save the present monetary and financial system—in its present form. So the only thing that we can do, which is politically feasible at this time, is to compare the success of the Roosevelt recovery and the relative success of the post-war reconstruction up until the middle of the 1960s, with the degeneration which exploded from
