

Editorial

Bertrand Russell Reaches from the Grave

There is no individual more relevant to the civilization-threatening crises which are now engulfing the planet, than Lord Bertrand Russell, arguably the most evil man of the 20th Century. Patriots of every nation, from the United States to Iran, ignore this grey eminence at their peril.

Start with the potentially most devastating scourge, the pandemic flu that began in Mexico this Spring. There is no evidence as yet that this flu virus, which is spreading rapidly from nation to nation, was deliberately concocted by mad, genocidal scientists. However, both the “greenie” policies of de-industrialization and population reduction, and the health-care policies which the Obama Administration, among others internationally, has imported from London, are, knowingly or not, creating the conditions of reduced health-care capabilities which are “necessary” to promote the flu epidemic’s ability to slaughter billions across the globe.

Russell was explicit about his genocidal intent in his 1951 Impact of Science on Society:

“At present the population of the world is increasing at about 58,000 per diem. War, so far, has had no very great effect on this increase ... but perhaps bacteriological war may prove effective. If a Black Death could spread throughout the world once in every generation, survivors could procreate freely without making the world too full. The state of affairs might be unpleasant, but what of it?”

You think that people who think so evilly couldn’t be determining policy today? You’re a fool. Since the time of John F. Kennedy’s assassination, our world’s culture has been rotted out by the very anti-population, anti-science ideology that Russell played a crucial role in setting into motion. The entire “environmentalist” establishment, topped by Prince Philip (“I want to be reincarnated as a deadly virus”), acts on Russell’s assumptions, as they move to kill life-saving technologies and policies.

The ardent anti-American genocidalist Russell did not confine himself to dreams of bacteriological warfare. He was also a devotee of the classical British imperial strategy—that of setting up wars between any potential challengers to British global hegemony. This self-proclaimed pacifist wanted to keep Britain out of wars, but he tirelessly worked toward destruction of nation-states, through fostering conflicts among them.

This Russell policy continues among the British imperial elite who are dominating the thinking of today’s governments. A crucial case in point is the situation in Southwest Asia, and specifically, Iran. As the Iranian government has begun to aggressively point out, British intelligence has played a pivotal role in exacerbating the conflict around the recent elections. To what purpose? To the Russellian purpose of sowing chaos and depopulation throughout the region, from Israel/Palestine through to Pakistan and Afghanistan, and then India—thus destroying the potential for pulling together the international combination led by Russia, the U.S., India, and China, which could stabilize the world economy, and neutralize the Empire.

How to banish Russell’s ghost? Take a lesson from Lyndon LaRouche, who ended his recent paper, “Economy for Scientists, Economic Science, in Short” (EIR, June 19) by identifying Russell’s role, and concluding: “If mankind is to reach the stars, that is the thought, in memory of the like of our great hero, President Franklin Roosevelt, which you must now remember.”