

Sare Campaign Issues The Goods on Christie

Oct. 3—Diane Sare’s campaign for Governor of New Jersey has issued a six-page dossier on the 2016 Republican presidential candidate and incumbent governor Chris Christie titled, “Chris Christie: Part III of the Bush-Obama nightmare.” The report, utilizing only publicly available information, demonstrates that Christie is the preferred 2016 candidate of the same Wall Street-City of London axis which controlled George W. Bush, and now controls Barack Obama. In the vernacular, he is a very large “Bush baby” with, in Wall Street’s view, the populist sucker appeal necessary to sell fascism as the economy disintegrates. Like Obama, he is also famously narcissistic.

The report recounts Christie’s 2011 courtship by none other than Henry Kissinger, who once admitted that during his entire swath of public service he was more loyal to the City of London than to the United States. Kissinger wanted Christie to run for President in 2012, and, according to Washington Post reporter Don Balz, offered his services to make up for Christie’s total lack of knowledge about foreign policy (in Christie’s case, anything outside local politics in New Jersey). Citing Christie’s ability to “connect with people,” Kissinger assembled a meeting of Wall Street bigwigs and other CEOs in July 2011 in which they appealed to Christie to make a 2012 run. Christie deferred and captured headlines in 2012 for undergoing weight-loss surgery and courting Obama in order to burnish his “independent” and “bipartisan” credentials.

The dossier goes on to document the sponsorship of Christie’s career by the Bush family apparatus beginning with Christie’s partnership with Bill Palatucci, the New Jersey chairman of George H.W. Bush’s 1988 and 1992 campaigns. Christie and Palatucci were lead partners in a New Jersey lawfirm which included the scandal-ridden private prison company CEC (whose major theater of operations was Texas), Edison Schools (the J.P. Morgan-funded public-private predator deployed against public education), and the (Wall Street) Securities Industry Association, then headed by Bernard Madoff. Christie became chief counsel for George W. Bush’s campaign in New Jersey, raising hundreds of thousands of dollars for the 2000 campaign. He was duly rewarded by an appointment as U.S. Attorney for New Jersey, despite a complete lack of criminal law experience.

As U.S. Attorney, Christie was portrayed by his public relations handlers as a relentless “John Dewey”-type crime-fighter, prosecuting low-level New Jersey corruption cases while leaving Wall Street and the 9/11 plotters from Paterson, N.J., unscathed. As Governor, he has done little more than position himself for a Wall Street-sponsored presidential run, cutting government spending, relentlessly pursuing green energy scams, including Wall Street’s favored solar energy and wind-farms (suppressing vital fusion energy research and nuclear power), and waging war on public education (a favored Bush family policy.)

Finally, the dossier points out that, like Obama and Bush, Christie has used disasters such as Hurricane Sandy as one endless photo op, boosting his political career with the appearance of “compassion” and “help,” while denying any real or meaningful economic and rebuilding aid to those affected. The full dossier is available at www.dianesare.com.

White House Photo/Pete Souza

President Obama and Gov. Chris Christie visit New Jersey residents for a photo op after Hurricane Sandy, Oct. 31, 2012. No significant aid was provided.