Leading Developments

Brits Meddle on Home Turf As Their Empire Collapses. The exposure last week of the British subversion operation known as the Integrity Initiative—a government-funded media/intelligence operation to subvert nations and institutions which refuse to submit to the Empire’s plan for war on Russia—has led to a new explosive revelation, as the British Labour Party has caught them running direct interference in their own national political and electoral process. The “Russiagate” coup attempt against President Donald Trump, run by political assassin Robert Mueller on behalf of MI6 and their assets in the Obama Administration, has now been caught running the same criminal operation against the opposition party in the U.K. itself. The Daily Record of Scotland on Sunday revealed that the Integrity Initiative Twitter feed has been running attacks on Labour Party Leader Jeremy Corbyn as a “Russian agent”. “What [Corbyn] has done,” one tweet reads, “wittingly or unwittingly, is work with the Kremlin agenda.”

The Labour Party has reacted vigorously. Labour’s Shadow Foreign Secretary, Emily Thornberry issued a statement: “It is simply outrageous that the clearly mis-named ‘Integrity Initiative’—funded by the Foreign Office to the tune of £2.25 million over the past two years—has routinely been using its Twitter feed to disseminate personal attacks and smears against the Leader of the Opposition, the Labour Party and Labour officials.” The Foreign Office stumbled all over itself, with Foreign Office Minister of State for Europe and the Americas Alan Duncan promising “an immediate investigation.”

President Trump is continuing to battle the coup-plotters in the U.S., while also building his personal ties to Xi Jinping and Vladimir Putin, even in the face of the “New McCarthyite” fraudulent attacks from the Democrats, and even from some Republicans. His economic adviser Larry Kudlow reported Sunday that the Chinese are moving rapidly to implement the agreement reached between Xi Jinping and Trump in Argentina, while Trump is optimistic that the U.S., China and Russia can reach an arms control accord soon.

Europe, meanwhile, is descending into chaos. Theresa May Monday postponed the Parliamentary vote on her fake Brexit plan, admitting that she had far from enough votes to pass it. The new CDU leader in Germany, Annegret Kramp-Karrenbauer, is proving to be a clone of Angela Merkel and will do nothing to stop the escalating collapse of all the traditional parties. After four weeks of mass-strike demonstrations across the nation, Saturday saw 136,000 people on the streets, with over 1,200 arrests. The Wall Street Journal reports, to its dismay, that Macron's plan to impose vicious austerity on the French people is failing, and that "panic has spread through the ranks of his allies and supporters in the National Assembly."

At the same time, the accelerating collapse of Deutsche Bank continues, as does the panic over the corporate debt bubble in the Western financial system. More voices are rising up to demand a return to the Glass-Steagall policies of Franklin Roosevelt. Zepp-LaRouche observed that in 1971, when Nixon pulled the plug on the dollar and the Bretton Woods system, her husband Lyndon LaRouche warned that the inevitable result over time would be a new depression, war, and the re-emergence of fascism, unless his proposal for restoring the Hamiltonian American System were implemented. France Erupts Against the Old Paradigm. What began as a spontaneous, limited protest over the rise in gas and oil prices in France, has grown over the past weeks to include more and more sectors of the population, who have seen their purchasing power dwindle over the years, and are furious that the government has simply ignored their demands. The "carbon tax" that all drivers were forced to pay was just the proverbial straw that broke the camel's back, uncorking the long pent-up anger at the unjust, anti-social policies.

Although President Emmanuel Macron finally backed down and agreed to immediately suspend the new carbon tax as well as the rise in electricity rates, the Yellow Vests called the concessions mere "crumbs", and refused to stop the mobilization.

The usual groups of provocateurs, from different ends of the political spectrum, were deployed again on Dec. 9 to engage in violence, plunder shops and stage clashes with the police. In anticipation, the government had mobilized nearly 90,000 law enforcement personnel around the country to deal with the violence, but most of them are also sympathetic to the popular movement. Moreover, the two largest trade unions, CGT and Force ouvrière, volunteered to help protect the demonstrations, since the Yellow Vests have no security forces of their own. And according to the latest polls, a good three fourths of the population support the protests.

Jacques Cheminade, in a Dec. 7 interview with LaRouchePAC TV, likened the explosion to a mass-strike ferment, in which "the past is rejected, but the future is not yet defined." However, the level of consciousness of the protesters rises above their own individual concerns to ask fundamental questions about the society that is oppressing them and the role of a true republic in defending their interests.

In that context, the role of his party, Solidarité et Progrès, he said, is to "give people a sense of the policies that are needed" to put an end to the thinking that puts financial interests above human life and dignity. "They need to think about how they can continue without staying at the same level of protest. That's a big challenge for the future." And people are more eager now to expand their horizons and understand "heavy ideas".

"...nobody thought that this would happen in France, because France is supposed to be controlled by the left, by the right, more than any other countries; by all political parties and every day they invent the new party trying to control the process.

"So, our advantage, compared to all these people [of the political parties], is the way I was mistreated in French politics, and when they learn about what they've done to Lyndon LaRouche...in the United States. Then, they have a certain sense of what was done to me, because of the three Presidential elections [Cheminade ran in]. They say, 'they have mocked you, they have attacked you, they have done to you exactly what's was done to us.' So, they have an understanding from this immediate standpoint, but I tell them, 'you have to go deeper into the understanding.'

"What we are trying to do—it's very interesting—in various layers, is to give them what they need: To give them the food to feed them, which is what they need to develop their thinking and go further than what they themselves expected.

"I was invited to three universities in Lille, in northern France, near the Belgian border. It's a city of about 1 million people—a big city. There, I told all the students, 'I got only 0.18% in the Presidential election. It's very little.' But they said, 'It's precisely for that [reason] that we want you. Because we know that if they did that to you, it's [because] you are different. We want to know why you are different, and as they say, what you have in the stomach. Please tell us.' So, we had very interesting meetings with them."\(back to top\)

Trump Tweets About Paris Riots. On Dec. 8 President Trump issued two tweets on the Paris protests:

"The Paris Agreement isn't working out so well for Paris. Protests and riots all over France. People do not want to pay large sums of money, much to third world countries (that are questionably run), in order to maybe protect the environment. Chanting 'We Want Trump!' Love France."

“Very sad day & night in Paris. Maybe it’s time to end the ridiculous and extremely expensive Paris Agreement and return money back to the people in the form of lower taxes? The U.S. was way ahead of the curve on that and the only major country where emissions went down last year!”(back to top)

Trump in Action

Trump Pounded Mueller and his Criminal Corrupt Opeation. in no less than nine tweets over the course of 22 hours from Thursday night to late Friday afternoon. That includes quoting Mueller-target Jerome Corsi, that Mueller's witchhunt "is not justice, this is not America. This is a political prosecution. The Special Prosecutor (Counsel), to get this plea deal, demanded I lie and violate the law. They're the criminals." And later in the day, a slam at reports that his lawyers are not preparing a counter report to the Mueller Report. "That is Fake News. Already 87 pages done, but obviously cannot complete until we see the final Witch Hunt Report," the President wrote. (back to top) recommending the abolition of parole. These are all the traditions, of course, of the Washington intelligence establishment and the Republican Party.

But, as many point out, that was years and years ago, and Barr has had a substantive life since then, mostly as a corporate lawyer. He has criticized Mueller’s witch hunt of President Donald Trump. He is a firm believer in the Executive powers of the President under Article II. Attorney Joseph diGenova and his wife both write that he is possibly the best thing since sliced bread. There is reason to believe, based on their prior roles together in the Bush Justice Department, that he knows the backstory on Robert Mueller in more detail than anyone, and that the two didn’t exactly get along. Time will tell. (back to top)

William Barr as Attorney General? Either a Guy To Take Down Mueller, or a Bush Plant? Time Will Tell. In his very young, prior life, under the tutelage of George H.W. Bush, Bill Barr was not a good guy. From high school on, he planned to be in the CIA, got there and was noticed by George H.W. Bush when he was Director of the CIA, and then was brought into the heart of Bush’s secret government operations, particularly those involving Ollie North and Iran-Contra. Then, in the Justice Department Office of Legal Counsel, he wrote opinions authorizing kidnapping and rendition. As Deputy Attorney General and then Attorney General from 1991-1993, he supervised the invasion of Panama, and the very ugly and illegal trial of Manuel Noriega. He also supervised the coverups of BNL (Banca Nazionale del Lavoro), otherwise known as Iraqgate (George H.W. Bush’s supplying weapons to Iraq which we later encountered in Margaret Thatcher’s war to “liberate” Kuwait), and BCCI (Bank of Credit and Commerce International, the British-spawned bank of crooks and criminals which was the moneybags for numerous intelligence operations worldwide, the center of much drug money-laundering and terrorist financing worldwide, and the honeypot for corrupting Third World leaders and numerous politicians on both sides of the aisle in the United States.)

Rome-Washington Axis against the EU and Geopolitics Consolidates. U.S. Ambassador to Italy Lewis Michael Eisenberg endorsed the Italian government in its confrontation with the European Union. Citing a tweet by Trump, Eisenberg said that “Prime Minister Conte is working a lot for the Italian economy and will be highly successful. This is what Trump believes and his hope as well.” Speaking at an Aspen Institute Italy meeting on “U.S.-Italy Dialogue” on Dec. 3, he said: “We believe that the process on the budget undertaken by Italy is very significant for Italy, the European Union and for the world.”

Italian Foreign Minister Enzo Moavero Milanese spoke next, saying, “I think that what we heard” from Ambassador Eisenberg “is clear. The United States is with us.”

At the same time, it has been reported that the U.S.-Italy axis on Mediterranean policy is making progress. After a meeting in Washington of Italian and U.S. officials in the framework of the “U.S.-Italy steering committee” set up during Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte’s visit to Washington last summer, Libyan National Army head Khalifa Haftar flew to Rome Dec. 5 to meet with Conte. This is part of the work to implement the roadmap agreed upon at the International Libya Conference last November in Palermo. (back to top)

Robert Mueller was the line DOJ prosecutor on all of these operations, reporting to Barr. Barr was a complete Neanderthal on criminal justice policy, going after low-level drug gangs and dealers for maximum jail sentences, and, as an advisor to the government of Virginia,

Larry Kudlow: Talks with China Are Going Well. Appearing December 8 on Fox News Sunday with host

Chris Wallace, Larry Kudlow, director of the National Economic Council, expressed optimism that U.S.-China trade talks are “on track,” and pointed to positive statements made last week by China’s Commerce Ministry as evidence of this. The Wall Street Journal quotes U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer, who is otherwise presented as a “hardliner” on the 90-day deadline to reach an agreement, saying that “if there’s a deal to be done, we’ll make it. The President wants us to make a deal.”

Kudlow reported that 35 Chinese agencies, along with China’s Supreme Court, are drawing up legislation to address intellectual property theft, and that China indicated in addition that it is prepared to purchase “large amounts” of U.S. services, as well as agricultural products, including soybeans, and also natural gas. China announced on Dec. 11 that it was cutting tariffs on U.S. automobiles. Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin has indicated that China may make additional purchases of $1.2 trillion, the Wall Street Journal reported, stating, “if that is real, that will close the trade deficit.”

So, Kudlow remarked, there are “some very positive statements” out of Beijing. “When you piece it together ... there’s a lot of good things out there.”

At the dinner in Argentina Kudlow said, “President Xi engaged in a level of detail... which was, in my opinion, quite unusual for the head of state. Guys like me are supposed to know the details. He did. He made the pitch himself. And [Xi] wasn’t winging it, he was well prepared. And so I was impressed with that and I felt that bolstered the Chinese commitment... We’ve never seen that hands-on participation by President Xi before. In fact, that dinner was quite remarkable.”

On Canada’s arrest, at the behest of the Justice Department, of Huawei’s Chief Financial Officer Meng Wanzhou, Kudlow underscored that President Donald Trump hadn’t known about it beforehand, and, after being informed, had “no reaction.” Wallace insisted, citing his “sources,” that Trump had been “livid” on learning the news, to which Kudlow replied he had not seen such a reaction, but hypothesized that, were he in a similar position, he, too, might be livid.

Otherwise, Kudlow emphasized that the case of Huawei’s Meng Wanzhou would not affect trade negotiations—that it’s a law enforcement issue, unrelated to trade. It’s “outside my lane,” he said. (back to top) sent to Democratic Party leaders calling for legislative action in 2019 which focuses on "constituents' concerns", rather than pursuing investigations aimed at impeaching President Donald Trump. What was surprising is that the letter was signed by 46 newly-elected Democratic Party Congressmen, which is more than three-quarters of those Democrats elected to the House for the first time in the November midterm election. This goes against the "conventional wisdom" that says the Democrats regained a majority in the House due to anger about Trump and the voters' desire to remove him.

The new Congressmen wrote that, while they have a duty to exercise oversight over the Executive Branch, "we must prioritize action on topics such as the cost of healthcare and prescription drugs, our crumbling infrastructure, immigration, gun safety, the environment, and criminal justice reform." Although the signers do not always agree on how to approach every issue, "...we are united in the belief that we have a mandate to debate, draft, and work across the aisle to pass legislation." The latter point is a direct appeal to put aside the toxic partisanship which has characterized the Democratic leadership's assault on President Trump since his election, using the "Russiagate" charges as an excuse to divert him from pursuing the policies on which he campaigned, and which led to his election.

Two polls show that the 46 Congressmen have a better view of voter sentiment than those, such as Rep. Adam Schiff, or the anti-Trump media pundits, who insist that the lesson from the midterm election is that Americans want Trump investigated, and removed. Nancy Pelosi, who is all-but-certain to return to her previous post as House Speaker in a vote in early January, has spoken out repeatedly against making impeachment the leading issue for Democrats, calling it a "distraction".

Rebuilding America's decrepit infrastructure is one point on which Democrats and Republicans could come together. Democrat Rep. Peter De Fazio, (D-OR) who is expected to become the incoming chairman of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, already introduced an infrastructure bill in the current session, and has said he is willing to work with the President.

Shortly after his inauguration, Trump appealed to Democrats to join him in upgrading America's infrastructure, but they refused. Following the 2018 midterm election, Trump has again held out his hand to the Democrats, saying he could work with them on issues such as infrastructure and reducing health care costs -- for example, lowering the cost of prescription drugs -- but only if they do not spend the next two years investigating | him. (back to top)

Climate Change Fraud

U.S., Russia, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait Block IPCC Report at COP24 Climate Conference. There is surprisingly good news out of the long-drawn-out annual UN climate circus (COP24) at Katowice, Poland, over Dec. 2-14. On Dec. 10 the U.S., Russia, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait prevented the adoption of the latest loony report from the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC). Climate fanatics were tearing out their hair, clamoring, “How can you oppose science?” and “Why, you yourself voted to commission this report—how can you oppose it now?” This is reported by British Empire media, BBC and the Guardian, among others.

The resolution before the body stated that it “welcomed” the Oct. 7 IPCC report, but the motion failed because no consensus could be reached. The alternative resolution of the four named countries stated simply that the conference “took note” of the report. The climate-nuts screamed at the four holdout delegations far into the night, Dec. 8. After the motion failed, most of the Dec. 9 proceedings were cancelled. The lower-level representatives now at Katowice were joined by ministers from some nations on Dec. 10; perhaps they will try to re-open this issue.

According to Associated Press, the U.S. State

Department put out a declaration which straightforwardly said that to “welcome” the report would indicate agreement with its findings, but the U.S. disagrees with the report. AP reports that the resolution “welcoming” the IPCC report would “[make] it the benchmark for future action.”

The IPCC Special Report at issue, “Understanding Global Warming of 1.5°C,” Number 15 of Oct. 6, 2018, claims that in order to avoid supposedly disastrous global warming in excess of 1.5°C, measured from the “beginning of the industrial era”—that global net man-caused CO2 emissions must be reduced to zero by the middle of this century. What does zero net emissions mean? It means that even in 2050, some few benighted folk will continue to burn fuels and suchlike, but that their CO2 “emissions” will be offset by the activities of more enlightened persons who will contrive to suck CO2 out of the air, and hide it underground or elsewhere. Thus there will be zero “net” man-caused CO2 emissions. (This from the World Resources Institute’s supportive summary of Oct. 7.)

The latter group of CO2-suckers will be located on the famous floating island of Laputa. This is what well over 100 national and other delegations voted to support, with only 4 dissenting. (back to top)

New Paradigm

Invest in Yemen Launches "Miracle Report" for Yemen Reconstruction. The government's General Investment Authority in Sana'a, Yemen launched the Schiller institute report "Operation Felix" as their reconstruction plan as reported in its newsletter! The special study, "Operation Felix," is the basis for a series of weekly seminars started several months ago to discuss Yemen's reconstruction and connection to the Belt and Road. On Dec. 5th, at such a seminar on the Chinese model of development and cooperation hosted by the Investment Authority, a letter by EIR's Hussein Askary about the new Chinese credit policy was presented.

Also, the Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister Dr. Hussein Maqboli has called for paying attention to agriculture, industry, which is in line with the Operation Felix proposal. During a ministerial meeting held in Sana'a, too, Maqboli said that the agricultural sector takes up 30% of the value of imports, despite the fact that Yemen has large agricultural areas, only a very small percentage of which is under cultivation. Maqboli pointed to the need to diversify the sources of income and not rely mainly on oil. (back to top)

China Succeeds in Launching Chang'e-4 Heading to Far Side of the Moon, May Spur U.S. Cooperation. In the early morning hours of Dec. 8, China sent a spacecraft into Earth orbit that will make history early next year when it lands on the far side of the Moon. As spaceweather.com aptly acknowledged, “if the mission succeeds, it will catapult China into the forefront of lunar exploration with a landing that no other nation has even dared to attempt.”

Chang'e-4 will not land immediately, but will orbit the Moon for perhaps a month. There are indications that the landing could take place around Jan. 3, because of the sunrise then over the Von Karman crater. Chang'e-4 will land inside the relatively small, flat Von Karman crater, in the area of the huge ancient South Pole-Aitkin Basin, which has a proliferation of smaller craters inside indicating its age. High-resolution photographs taken by NASA's Lunar Reconnaissance Orbiter reveal a strikingly different geology and geography on the far side than on the side facing Earth. The Change'e-4 rover is equipped with an imaging spectrometer for analysis of the lunar soil, and a radar to look into the geological past of the far side of the Moon.

The landing mission was made possible by the May launch of the Queqiao relay satellite, which sits in a halo orbit past the Moon. From this vantage point, it can communicate with both the spacecraft on the Moon and mission control on Earth. (back to top)

Roscosmos Director Rogozin Will Visit U.S. Next Year. “Dmitry Rogozin will visit the United States to hold talks as Roscosmos Director General and Russian Presidential Envoy for International Space Cooperation,” Tass reported. Roscosmos’ statement pointed out that U.S. sanctions would not hinder Rogozin’s activities as Presidential Envoy because “for the most part, talks take place either in Russia or in countries that sanctions do not cover,” Tass reported.

Rogozin will also supervise all key international projects, Roscosmos stated: “They include the International Space Station project, the Russian-EU ExoMars mission and the Russian-Kazakh Baiterek complex.”

Rogozin was invited to visit the U.S. by NASA Administrator Jim Bridenstine in October, when Bridenstine was in Russia and Kazakhstan. At that time Bridenstine said that Washington would temporarily lift the sanctions that had prohibited Rogozin from entering the United States.

“I would like to discuss many questions with Dmitry Rogozin,” the NASA administrator said last October. “If we want to establish a good working relationship, then we need to start to fully interact with each other, which in turn, will be good for both countries.”

Bridenstine also said that Rogozin may speak at Rice University in Houston. “I was happy to make a speech at Moscow State University, his alma mater, and I would be happy for him to make a speech in Rice University.” (back to top)

New Momentum in Fusion Energy Research Should Get Federal Support. Each year, Steve Dean, president of Fusion Power Associates, organizes a conference to review the status and advances, and future plans in fusion energy research, internationally. Dean established Fusion Power Associates in 1980, after a leadership career in the government fusion program.

This year’s conference was notable for two interrelated reasons. Dean reported that when attendance reached 100, he had to turn people away, because that was all that the room could hold. Last year, he said, he had about 80 registrants, and some 60 the year before—clearly an increasing interest in fusion research.

The substantial increase in funding over this year by the Congress undoubtedly helped, but whereas many of those attending for years have been the gray-haired leaders of the various fusion programs, this year, there has been an influx of younger, enthusiastic scientists and engineers. These are from the privately-funded start-ups, which according to one report, have raised $1 billion in private funds.

Although it is regarded as unlikely that the majority, or perhaps any, of the private companies will reach the goal of commercial fusion, most are carrying out valuable research, trying new, innovative approaches, and even picking up fruitful ideas that were never fully pursued due to funding cutoffs. These bring new ideas and enthusiasm into fusion research. In general, the new, small, private fusion companies have no illusions as to how difficult their task is, and have said outright that when they reach a certain level and size of experiment, they will need government support.

A new appointee to the Department of Energy Office of Science made very short impromptu remarks that were upbeat, telling the fusion scientists that their work “can change the world.” Perhaps this indicates a sea change in the Trump Administration’s view of fusion, and will result in an increase in funding, rather than a cut, as was the case with last year’s, Fiscal 2019 budget request.
